DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Dave Sisler House is located on White Rock Road in a wooded area S of Keeler Glade. The house sits on rising ground, several feet back from the road.

The house is a two-story, hipped-roof, ell-plan dwelling with a three-bay, center-door facade. The facade points NE. The main block measures one-bay on the side elevations and the ell measures one-bay on the sides by two-bays across the rear (SW elevation).

The house rests on a low stone foundation and the frame walls are covered with German siding. The windows are two over two sash and have simple cornices and plain board surrounds. The facade door has four panels and must once have had a set of steps or a porch providing access. These are currently missing.

The roof is covered with tar paper. The house has one interior chimney on the main block near the inner corner of the ell.

The first floor of the interior consists of three rooms plus an enclosed staircase. The staircase is set NW of center and has a small enclosed landing. The bedroom is beyond the staircase to the NW. SE of the stair case are the front door and the living room. The kitchen occupies the ell. The interior walls are lath and plaster. All window and door trim is symmetrically molded in astragal and ogee pattern. All interior doors have four panels, with box locks and china knobs.

Several board and batten outbuildings are located on the property. The main house appears to be constructed of vertical planks.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The house was moved to this location by Dave Sisler from Kendall, a former lumbering community on the Youghiogheny some two miles south of Friendsville.¹ Kendall, originally named Krug, was founded in 1891 by the A. Knabb and Company as a locus for the company's timber-cutting activities in that area. The area was renamed Kendall between 1902 and 1910, when the Kendall brothers bought the company. Old photographs show a small company town with dwellings such as this one, of a utilitarian aspect. The town died when the sawmill was closed in 1912 and the equipment dispersed. This house was evidently moved, reportedly by wagon and horse team, sometime after that date. The house appears to have been on its present foundation for some time.

Kendall itself has disappeared; much of the land once owned by the lumbering company is now part of Swallow Falls State Forest and the site of the town is part of the Youghiogheny Scenic River designation. Only traces remain of the road along the Youghiogheny that led to it from Friendsville, and a few foundations still exist on the site.
